Jackie Sloane, MCC

Jackie Sloane specializes in working with leaders and teams to achieve greater well-being and results through how they engage others, communicate and cultivate relationships. In the process, clients become more in touch what really matters to them and to those they must influence, and how physical presence, attitude, and “small things” impact how others respond.

Jackie has been coaching since 1994, serving leaders and groups at privately-held, nonprofit, public sector and Fortune 500 organizations in a variety of industries, including manufacturing, marketing, professional services, publishing, pharmaceutical and sales. As a marketing consultant, she has specialized in positioning, creating programs that resulted in national visibility, increased sales, key contracts, favorable offers of acquisition and other business results. She draws from over 20 years of business expertise as a coach, marketing consultant and staff member of a national magazine. She has served clients from Abbott, Accenture, Deloitte, Digitas, Hollister, Kraft, Navistar and many other organizations.

Jackie was among the initial group of coaches to be awarded the Master Certified Coach designation from the International Coach Federation. She serves on the planning committee of the Network of Executive Women’s Annual Leadership Summit and on the Advisory Board of Working Mother Media’s Multicultural Leadership Summits. She writes executive coaching columns for Executive Travel and leadership columns for the Chicago Examiner.
